

Parks can bring outdoor power

Do parks build community power?

Parks and green spaces that enable community engagement and organizing are often overlooked interventions for building community power. Parks have enormous unrealized potential to serve a critical function for the nation: social infrastructure.

Why are public parks and green spaces important?

The development of public parks and green spaces is a dynamic and ongoing process integral to urban life quality. These spaces are crucial for ecological balance, public health, and community cohesion. As urbanization accelerates, the demand for innovative, accessible, and sustainable green spaces will grow.

Why do we need new parks?

The creation of new parks represents a powerful way to regenerate both the land and the communities that inhabit it. By restoring damaged landscapes, providing valuable green spaces, and fostering environmental education and awareness, parks can play a significant role in healing the land and building more sustainable and resilient communities.

Why do we need parks & public spaces?

Envisioning, planning, creating, and stewarding a park exemplifies social infrastructure, enabling communities to address social issues on their terms and replace despair and frustration with hope and action. To respond to the times, parks and public spaces must become not just passive spaces but catalysts in forming a healthy polity.
